Stat prioritises ease of use and setup

TPOne is Danfoss's new programmable room thermostat, suitable for most domestic heating applications. The TPOne has all the functionality of existing TP models in one range, including seven day programming, holiday function, and timing for a hot water cylinder.

Key features include a digital display with easy-read icons and information on status and settings. With a highly intuitive user interface, TPOne combines fast installation and set-up wizard and menus with one-touch controls so householders can control their heating with confidence for optimum comfort.

Danfoss has also designed TPOne with two new heating startup options to reduce energy consumption. In addition to the Standard startup for instant heat at the scheduled time, users can select a Delayed or Optimised start. Both adjust dynamically according to the difference between the ambient and set temperature.

Danfoss presents TPOne

Danfoss is making intelligent heating control "even easier" with the launch of the new TPOne Programmable Room Thermostat.

Designed to suit almost any domestic heating control application, Danfoss says that the TPOne delivers all the functionality of the existing TP models in one all-new range, including seven-day programming, holiday function. It also offers timing for a hot water cylinder.

In developing the new TPOne, Danfoss has focused on efficiency, simplicity and an attractive contemporary design, it says. Key features include a digital display with easy-read icons and information on status and settings. A backlight illuminates as soon as the display is activated and on-screen guides make it easy to navigate menus for setting or adjusting heating times and temperatures, Danfoss explains.

Among TPOne's "user-friendly" features is the new quick access Scenario interface. This one-click button function provides the flexibility to make a temporary change to the pre-programmed schedule to save energy or deliver increased comfort.
